Nauro's language has been widely studied by linguists and anthropologists. His use of certain morphological markers and grammatical structures is unique. The language has a high degree of morphological complexity, with numerous prefixes and suffixes that denote various grammatical and syntactic functions. The verb 'to be' is expressed in a number of different ways, depending on the subject and tense. The language also has a complex system of noun classification, with numerous categories that are used to distinguish between different types of objects. Overall, Nauro's language is a fascinating example of the diversity of human language and the many ways in which it can be used to express ideas and convey meaning.

I don’t know why the government is doing this to us. We have been living in peace for over 30 years, and now they want to evict us from our homes. This is unfair and unjust. We have been living here for generations, and we don’t want to leave. We are asking the government to reconsider their decision and give us a chance to stay in our homes.

Sue Docherty

Sue Docherty is a 56-year-old mother of three who has lived in the area for over 20 years. She has been fighting to save her home and community for the past year. She is a strong woman who will not give up easily.
