Malappuram - Wayanad-Kozhikode-Kollam-Calicut

On 26th April 2008, a major flood hit the Malappuram district of Kerala, India, causing severe damage to the region. The floods were caused by heavy rainfall that led to the overflowing of rivers and streams, leading to widespread destruction of homes, roads, and infrastructure. The situation was exacerbated by the lack of preparedness, leading to the loss of lives and livelihoods.

The floods were one of the worst in the region in recent years, and the government launched an immediate relief and rescue operation to help the affected people. The rescue operations involved the deployment of boats, helicopters, and other resources to evacuate people from flooded areas.

The flood situation improved gradually as the rains subsided, and the relief operations continued to provide assistance to the affected people. The government and other organizations worked together to provide relief supplies and support to the affected communities.

The Malappuram district, which was hit the hardest, received support from the government and other agencies to help the affected people. The district administration worked closely with the relief authorities to ensure that the people received the necessary assistance.

The flood situation in Malappuram district continues to be monitored, and the government continues to provide support to the affected people. The district administration is working to restore normalcy and provide assistance to the affected communities.
