Reticuloendothelial system

The system comprises of the reticuloendothelial cells present in various organs and tissues. These cells are mainly found in the liver, spleen, lymph nodes, and sinuses. The reticuloendothelial cells are phagocytic and play a crucial role in the immune response. They engulf and destroy bacteria, virus-infected cells, and other foreign particles.

Antibodies (Gamma Globulins)

Antibodies, also known as immunoglobulins, are proteins produced by the immune system in response to invading pathogens. They are classified into five main types: IgG, IgA, IgM, IgD, and IgE. Each type has specific functions, such as neutralizing toxins, marking pathogens for destruction, and activating complement.

Interferon

Interferon is a protein produced by host cells in response to viral infection. There are three main types of interferon: alpha, beta, and gamma. Interferon binds to specific receptors on the surface of host cells, activating various defense mechanisms. It has antiviral, antiproliferative, and immunomodulatory effects.

Parasympathetic

The parasympathetic nervous system is responsible for regulating activities that are typically performed when the body is at rest. It is involved in processes such as digestion, detoxification, and reproduction. The parasympathetic nervous system is often referred to as the "rest and digest" system.

Conclusion

In conclusion, the reticuloendothelial system, antibodies, interferon, and the parasympathetic nervous system are crucial components of the body's defense mechanisms. Understanding their roles and functions is essential for maintaining overall health and well-being.
