GASTROENTERITIS

1. Inflammatory Diarrhea

   - Also known as cholera, this type of diarrhea is caused by bacteria such as V. cholerae. Symptoms include profuse, watery stools, rapid dehydration, and vomiting.

2. Non-Inflammatory Diarrhea

   - This type of diarrhea is caused by food poisoning or viral infections. Symptoms include abdominal pain, fever, and nausea.

Food Poisoning

- Foods can become contaminated with bacteria or toxins, leading to illness. Common causes include Salmonella and Listeria monocytogenes.

History

- Include details about the onset of symptoms, any recent travel or exposure to infected individuals, and any recent changes in diet.

Examination

- Physical examination should focus on assessing hydration status, bowel sounds, and possible signs of systemic infection.

Investigations

- Faecal culture for Shigella, Salmonella, or Escherichia coli can help identify the causative agent.

Exclusion of other causes

- Rule out other conditions such as lactose intolerance or celiac disease.

---

ORS

- Oral rehydration solution (ORS) is used to replace lost fluids and electrolytes. It contains salts, glucose, and water.

Applications

- Oral route is preferred for administering ORS. In infants, it should be given in small, frequent amounts.

---

Diapers

- Nappies or diapers should be changed frequently to prevent skin irritation and infection.

---

Potassium

- Potassium is a vital mineral for maintaining normal fluid balance. It should be replenished through ORS.

---

Perchlorate

- Perchlorate is a toxic substance that can be ingested from sources such as batteries. Symptoms include diarrhea, vomiting, and abdominal pain.

---

Irritants

- Irritants such as soaps and detergents can cause dermatitis. Avoid using these substances around the diaper area.

---

Toilets

- A toilet kit should be available for cleaning the diaper area and maintaining hygiene.

---

Infectious Diarrhea

- This type of diarrhea is caused by infectious agents such as viruses or bacteria. It is often seen in outbreaks and can be transmitted through contaminated food or water.

---

Prevention

- Good hygiene practices, such as handwashing, can help prevent the spread of infectious agents.
